Background & Purpose of the CASE

- In order to continue the improvement of Asian scientific research publication necessary for international attention,
 - CASE has been established during Asian Science Editor's Conference & Workshop 2014 on July 2, 2014.
 - As a non-governmental, non-partisan, and non-profit organization, CASE aims to improve the quality of science journals published in Asia through consulting and information exchange regarding editing and publishing.

Peer Review for Open Science

Peer review is one of the most essential processes in scholarly journal publishing. Various attempts have been made recently to improve the peer review process while open science is focused in scholarly societies. In this webinar, we would like to look at the challenges, and ethical guidelines of peer review, and introduce examples of innovative peer review systems.

Short Course Editing and Publishing Scholarly Journals in Asia

Scholarly journal editors and publishers need to learn about many topics of journal publishing such as peer review, manuscript editing, language editing, archiving, indexing, etc. Therefore, CASE has prepared a short course on the topics for Asian journal editors. This talk is about academic publishing and scholarly journals. It is addressed to journal editors and to scholars interested in knowing about academic publishing in Asia.

Program:

Session 1: Digitization and Academic Journals (50 minutes)

How digitization changed global English-language academic publishing and scholarly publishing in Asia, leading to a three-way division between commercial, not-for-profit, and open access publishers.

Break (10 minutes)

Session 2: Editorial Process (50 minutes)

What journal editors do, their role in shaping the identity of a journal, and the possible impact of artificial intelligence.

Break (10 minutes)

Q&A Session (1 hour)

Participants are invited to submit questions on the chat box during the talk.

Lecturer Dr. Paul KRATOSKA

Paul Kratoska is Managing Director of Ampersand Blue Editorial Services. He is an experienced journal editor and former director of the National University of Singapore Press.
